Mental health and substance abuse are the top health concerns in Natchaug Hospital’s service areas, according to community stakeholders and staff members who attended a health needs prioritization meeting at the main hospital on June 11.

The meeting, which included representatives from local hospitals, healthcare agencies, social service groups and community leaders, presented the results of a triennial community health needs assessment and asked attendees to rank the top health priorities for the community. The report and prioritization will be used as a roadmap to help Natchaug and its community partners improve population health over the next few years.

Similar meetings held by Windham and Backus hospitals also identified mental health as the top priority in the east region, along with heart disease and stroke, substance abuse, and diabetes.

“The fact that mental health was identified as the top priority by stakeholders at three separate meetings for three service areas speaks volumes about the community’s needs and the changing attitudes towards mental illness,” said Carrie Pichie, Ph.D., Natchaug Director of Ambulatory Services. “Across HHC and the country, we’ve made major strides towards reducing the stigma associated with mental illness, and the feedback from this meeting is a great example of that fact.”

Data for the health needs assessment was collected by phone interviews with 2,087 adults in the Natchaug Hospital service area, including Windham and New London counties along with portions of Middlesex, Tolland and Hartford counties.

According to the needs assessment, 10.7 percent of those surveyed reported “fair” or “poor” mental health, and a disproportionate percentage of these respondents were black or Hispanic.

(37.9 percent) and had low or very low income (47.3 percent).

In the area of substance abuse, the number of drug-induced deaths in Natchaug Hospital’s service area exceeded Connecticut and nationwide averages with 14.2 annual deaths per 100,000 people. The percentage of drinkers also topped Connecticut and national statistics with 63.9 percent, but the percentage of excessive drinkers fell just below national averages.

The presentation also included data from an online key informant survey of 117 community stakeholders including health providers, social service agencies, physicians and others. More than 60 percent of these informants identified mental health as a “major problem” in the community, with access to care, lack of services, stigma and finding practitioners as the reasoning.

“The next step is to take a look at how Natchaug can collaborate with other providers, especially Windham and Backus Hospitals, to help impact mental health and substance abuse in the community,” Pichie said.

Connecticut bill aims for equal mental health treatment from insurers

A Connecticut bill that would clarify the nature of mental health services covered by insurance policies is awaiting review by Gov. Dannel Malloy.

One provision that didn’t make the final bill would have required insurers to cover emergency mental health-related hospitalizations for at least 14 days. Generally, mental health providers must go through a recertification process after two or three days, which can result in a shortened treatment.

“We understand that people should not be residing within institutions any longer than they need to be,” said Hank Schwartz, MD, psychiatrist-in-chief at the Institute of Living.

Klein, O’Dea assume new roles within BHN leadership

The Behavioral Health Network leadership team is pleased to announce that David C. Klein, Ph.D., has accepted the position of Natchaug Vice President of Clinical Operations, a position recently vacated by Justin Sleeper, MSN. This change returns Klein to his previous leadership role at Natchaug, and was made at Klein’s request, in an effort to simplify the scope of his responsibilities.

James F. O’Dea, Ph.D., MBA, will replace David as BHN Vice President of Operations.

A clinical psychologist, Klein has held a number of high level administrative and leadership positions with Natchaug and the BHN since 1978. His leadership in helping to create the BHN has improved access to care throughout the BHN, established a working Operations Council with all BHN members, and along with Steven Zuckerman helped transform Rushford. The improvements at Rushford are dramatic, and it is on its way to becoming a growing and profitable partner in the BHN.

Prior to his BHN role, Klein served in nearly every leadership role at Natchaug, including Vice President and Chief Operating Officer when he assumed the role of interim President of Windham Hospital. Klein constantly displays discretionary effort, and has earned the respect of staff at every level of the organizations he has touched. His continued leadership at Natchaug and within the East Region will certainly ensure the continued success of behavioral health services in our region.

O’Dea, also a clinical psychologist, most recently has served as HHC Regional Director of Cancer Services and East Region Director of Behavioral Health Services. In these roles, he has worked closely with multiple physician practices and departments on strategic and operational planning for the cancer service line, and the Hartford Health-Care Cancer Institute’s successful partnership with Memorial Sloan-Kettering, as well as the integration of Backus and Windham Hospital into the BHN. His recent leadership in developing a model behavioral health and primary care initiative, as part of the East Region’s Preventive Medicine Initiative, is most impressive. This is a key initiative of the BHN, and bodes well for our future as Jim leads the entire BHN operation to further integration with acute care and primary care.

Employed at Backus Hospital and now HHC since 1989, O’Dea has held a number of different leadership positions involving program development and operations. He has also been actively involved in patient safety and quality initiatives, leading the Backus Patient Safety and Quality Department, serving as an administrator for the Backus Level III Trauma Program and formerly as Director of Psychiatric Services.

O’Dea and Klein will develop a transition plan in the next few weeks that will ensure that all of their current responsibilities are clearly addressed.

staff speaks out

If you could have lunch with any person alive or dead, who would it be, and why?

My husband because he’s been so supportive of my career over the last 40 years and I look forward to spending more time with him on July 8 when I retire!

— Ellen Buffington, BHN Director of Professional Education

It would be my mom, because she has always been, in both life and death, my role model.

— Raquel Maldonado, Rushford admissions

Probably President Barack Obama because I think it would be really cool to have lunch with the president.

— Caitlin Swartz, Rushford admissions
Following 11 months of construction, The Hospital of Central Connecticut (HOCC)’s 32-bed inpatient psychiatric unit is set to open on June 25 — further enhancing the ability of the Behavioral Health Network to meet the needs of patients.

The brand new unit offers inpatient mental health and substance abuse treatment for patients 18 and older across central Connecticut and state-wide. Located on the HOCC New Britain campus, the expanded unit is on the third floor of the hospital’s East and West Pavilion.

“Our new state-of-the-art unit will allow us to better serve the people in our communities, many of whom are quite ill and in desperate situations,” said Michael E. Balkunas, MD, Chief of Psychiatry and Behavioral Health for The Hospital of Central Connecticut.

Staff will shortly begin training in this new unit in order to become accustomed to the work area. Additionally, on June 10, staff and volunteers participated in a “Day in the Life” exercise to evaluate the flow and function of 20-plus patient scenarios.

“The new unit at HOCC adds four inpatient behavioral health beds to our region, thereby increasing patients’ access to inpatient psychiatric care across central Connecticut and beyond and also allowing for a wider range of treatment options and clinical interventions to be offered,” said Pat Rehmer, MSN, ACHE, HHC Senior Vice President for Behavioral Health.

During inpatient treatment, patients have access to one-on-one care with expertly trained psychiatric providers, a range of group therapies,occupational therapy, medication management and stabilization, and assistance with discharge planning. Staff also keep patients’ families informed about their care through family meetings.

The new unit also features:

- A mix of handicap and geriatric accessible private and semi-private rooms designed specifically for patients’ comfort and safety.
- Additional group therapy rooms to accommodate an increased number of new treatment modalities, such as music therapy, occupational therapy and social work.
- Enhanced security features including upgraded video monitoring and a fully integrated nurse call system.
- A pristine, soothing color scheme with breathtaking views of New Britain’s rolling landscape.

The opening of the new, larger unit was part of a plan introduced three years ago to expand access to inpatient psychiatry services in the HHC Central Region.

A formal ribbon cutting is scheduled for Wednesday, June 24, from 2-4 p.m.

Natchaug at Particle Accelerator concert

Primary Therapist Fannie McGowan, MSW, and Mental Health Worker Lacy Milano from Joshua Center Northeast represented Natchaug Hospital at the Annual Particle Accelerator Benefit concert, on Saturday, June 13, in Putnam.

Particle Accelerator is an annual benefit concert that raises money to support programs at United Services of Dayville, such as the 24-Hour emergency hotline and Mental Health First Aid training. The concert also provides information and support for depression and suicide prevention, while promoting music and civic engagement as a healthy alternative to drug and alcohol abuse.

Particle Accelerator first began in 2007 in response to the suicide of local musician Jack Young, Jr., who took his own life on his 27th birthday.

New fence for pediatric playground

Plant Operations maintenance staff are on track to complete a new wooden fence around the playground at the main hospital. The fence, which replaces a stone wall as the barrier around the playground, will help create a safer place for pediatric clients to play.

Mental Health First Aid classes set through September

Mental Health First Aid (MHFA) and Youth Mental Health First Aid (YMHFA) classes will be offered by the BHN through the month of September.

Changes ahead for BHN marketing team

The BHN marketing team is about to change, as Carol Vassar relocates to the Hartford HealthCare System Support Office in Newington to head up the system’s social media efforts.

In her new role, Vassar will work collaboratively with employees from across the system to create a cohesive new strategy for HHC’s social media, including Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest, LinkedIn and Instagram.

Vassar joined HHC in December 2012 as the public relations and marketing manager for Rushford. She became part of the three-person BHN marketing in 2014, working on a variety of print, online and social media projects at Rushford, IOL and HOCC, as well as BHN-wide projects and events, including the National Dialogue on Mental Health, which recently won a Best of New England Lamplighter award from the New England Society for Health Care communications, BHNews, the Stop the Stigma campaign and the CCAR and NAMI Walks. She previously worked in marketing and communications capacities at CT Department of Public Health, American Red Cross and Capital Community College.

“Behavioral health is both a personal and professional passion for me,” Vassar said. “While I will no longer be working directly on BHN-centered marketing projects, I truly look forward to continuing to work with my BHN friends and colleagues in my new role.”

Vassar’s successor on the BHN marketing team is Matt Burgard. He has been working in the planning and marketing department at Hartford HealthCare since October 2013, concentrating on the Hartford HealthCare Cancer Institute and The Hospital of Central Connecticut. Prior to that, he was employed in the marketing and communications department at Waterbury Hospital and also spent more than 15 years as a newspaper reporter. Burgard joins the team alongside Communications Specialist Amanda Nappi and Marketing Director Shawn Mawhiney. He’ll be based at Rushford at Meriden.

Vassar and Burgard start in their new roles on July 1.

“At the same time, we welcome Matt to our team — he is a proven storyteller and there are many great stories to tell throughout the BHN.”

You are invited!
